ACS References at XE HQ Year Start

Ursula Burns took the decision to acquire ACS. I'm not completely sure that we all understood the impact that this decision is going to have on the company, I think it's huge; I think it has been the most bold and courageous decision that Xerox Corporation has made for many many years. I am extremely excited about it, I have to tell you.

I had Ursula on the phone, not a long time ago, this week in fact, and as you know, the vote of the shareholders, that is the last step, is going to happen on the 5th of February. This is for Xerox shareholders and ACS shareholders. And the level of confidence is high that the vote will be positive and that the acquisition will be completed, and in fact, the formal announcement of the acquisition is supposed to come out on the 8th of February.

So this acquisition, in fact, reshapes Xerox, and in many ways, makes our journey since 2005 even more meaningful. It was already meaningful, even with our current services offering, but suddenly becomes almost like, as if we were capable to predict the future, if you understand what I mean, because with ACS and the ACS offering now on our portfolio, I mean, there is no way we would succeed, and leverage this acquisition if we were not training to organise ourselves this way. There was no way we could be ready as a company, if we would not have put in place the effort and the focus into a services business and a services led business as we have done in 2005.

Now, did we know that ACS was going to be acquired, no. In fact, I think, Xerox Europe has played a key role in demonstrating to the corporation that this was the way forward, and this is maybe one of the many reasons why ACS was ultimately acquired.

Question:

How does the announcement fit with the corporation announcement to acquire Affiliated Computer Services?

Answer:

Well, I think I already answered that question also. The large accounts, the focus on relationships. There is a word, there is a term, there is a concept that we need to engrave on our brains. It's called "Business-social". Do you understand what is meant by business-social. It is the act that senior leaders need to do, to meet other senior leaders in business-social occasions, and build relationships and trust. We do very little of this, very little. For a services led company, this is a killer. You need to do it, you just need to do it. In several formats and ways, but you need to do it. You need to get there, you need to have the relationships, you need to know people, you need to be known by people, they need to know that you have done this, in this account and it was successful. ACS is just broadening that neath, increasing it dramatically, because now its not only about going there and saying before you were used to buy this nice printer etc. now we have this great service called XOS, now we are in the BPO space .

You could be confused by my comments and say, I understood that we were not going to integrate ACS or ACS is going to continue to operate as an independent company. Yes it is. But obviously we are going to mutually leverage both companies, so we are going to take their portfolio, and particularly in Europe, and I would say the rest of the world apart from the US, our guys are going to have it on their briefcase, and they are going to talk about it. And when the opportunity is there, we are going to call ACS and they will come and we will use their expertise, and we will develop the selling cycle, close it and implement it. So obviously, this is very very very meaningful, as I said before, it is like we were the most brilliant visionaries in the world, and we have predicted all this.

In fact, it is so the opposite, I repeat myself because I really feel proud of you guys because of what you have succeeded to do. I think XE has had a key contribution by its success on lead with services to make the corporation understand that this is the way forward. And from there, comes the ACS acquisition.

Question:

What impact do you see the ACS integration having on XE in 2010? What short term values and synergies do you see?

Answer:

Well, as you probably know, we have been quite limited on our capability to dialogue with ACS. The rules in the US on this type of acquisition are quite strict and they say that the companies need to continue to be two different companies, until the acquisition is confirmed. So we have had almost no contact with ACS, because that s what we need to do. There is no ACS integration by the way. ACS will continue to operate on their own. But we will, as I said, obviously take their portfolio and into our offerings and promote them and I think it will have a huge impact on XE. I think, as you know, they are a $6.5 billion company in the US alone, or almost. If you do the proportion, there is no reason why they could not have a $4 billion business outside of the US, at least. So, clearly, its an opportunity for Europe and the rest of the world. By the way, the intention of Xerox is to have ACS to create an organisation that will cover the rest of the world, with particular emphasis on Asia and Europe. Lets not forget, ACS is not present in Asia, and the type of offering that ACS has is viable for Xerox to have a presence there.
