TD Ameritrade Integration Planning Update

Issue No. 4

September 22, 2005

Last week's meeting

On September 13, business leaders from Ameritrade, TD Waterhouse¹ and TD Bank Financial Group met to report on their integration planning progress. Teams shared and discussed their hypotheses with each other and senior management. The teams also discussed projected synergies and outlined preliminary decisions about structure and location for individual business units. For select areas, recommendations have been validated, and we will begin communicating decisions soon.

Timing of communication will vary. Generally, decisions related to major business units (e.g. call centers and other brokerage operations, branches, advisors) will be finalized and communicated first. Corporate and other support groups will be firming up their structure once these high-level business decisions have been made in order to best support major businesses. As different groups will have different timelines, we will strive to let affected associates know as much as possible as soon as possible.

Many of you had the opportunity to read about the selection process in the August 24th TD Ameritrade Integration Planning Update. Given the need to ensure consistency across all business areas as it relates to associate assessment, it's important we highlight this process again and provide additional details.

Staffing Plans and Selection Process

As we've said before, our goal is to build a strong organization that combines the best people and processes from both Ameritrade and TD Waterhouse. Business leaders are creating staffing plans for their areas for after the Closing date. They will finalize these plans with their ELT/EMT member and Human Resources representatives. Plans will include organizational charts (without names), job titles, responsibilities, qualifications for each position, number of positions needed, as well as other details. After business units finalize their organizational structures and determine where positions will be located, we will begin the associate selection processes.

We want to select the best candidate for each position, regardless of whether they are an Ameritrade or TD Waterhouse associate. All candidates will be assessed using a common evaluation method. Although there may be variations to accommodate specific business unit needs, there will be a core process to ensure consistency.

Will I have to re-apply for my job?

No, the process is not designed to require all associates to re-apply for their positions. The structure of some business units will be very similar to what they are today, while others will change to accommodate the needs of the combined company. Some positions will remain unchanged in terms of responsibility and location; some positions may move or open up in different locations; and some positions may be eliminated. There will also be a number of new positions that don't currently exist in either firm, creating new opportunities for associates. For positions that change, or for newly-created opportunities, associates from both firms will be assessed based on demonstrated performance, skills, competencies, and overall fit for the position.

As we stated in the Associate Commitment Letter, associates whose positions will be terminated as a result of the transaction will be given at least 60 days' advance notice. Those associates not selected for a position with the combined company will be advised of their circumstances in a process coordinated between Human Resources and their business unit. These associates may be eligible for severance as outlined in other communications.

Geography and relocation

Clearly, it's important that you know the eventual size of your business unit, as well as the type of positions that will exist and where they will be located, which is why we're committed to communicating this information up front. Based on these decisions, you will receive specific information about how the selection process will work in your business unit.

Generally, if you're already in a location where positions will be available, you will automatically be entered into the selection process for those positions. Associates outside of a business unit's designated geographic location can express their interest in relocating and apply for suitable positions. These associates will be able to participate in the selection process and may be selected to relocate, based on their qualifications and the needs of the business. To express interest, associates will fill out a Position Interest/Associate Information Form, which will highlight your skills, accomplishments and other relevant information you would like considered as part of the selection process. Relocation assistance will be available for most positions. More information about the program will be available as the communication process takes place in your business unit.

And lastly, the preliminary proxy statement has been filed

Ameritrade filed its preliminary proxy statement with the SEC on September 12, 2005, and the SEC will initiate a review of the document. Once finalized, the proxy statement will be mailed to Ameritrade shareholders four to five weeks before its special shareholders' meeting. Since we don't know how long the review process will take, or the time it will take to receive approval from other regulatory bodies, it's difficult to predict when the closing will occur. However, our expectation remains that the closing will occur by early calendar year 2006.

Please keep an eye out for more information and continue to submit your questions and thoughts through Zoomerang.
